Neuberger Is Mourned By U. S. Senate For Great Heart, Great Courage, On Side Of Human Welfare

Following the death of U.S. Senator Richard L. Neuberger, aged forty-seven years, in his home city of Portland, Oregon, on March 9, President Eisenhower sent a personal message of sympathy to Mrs. Richard L. Neuberger whose husband had suffered a cerebral hemorrhage, and all legislative activity in both houses of Congress was postponed out of respect to the Senator's memory as Democrats and Republicans alike paid him tribute, says the New York Herald Tribune. The text of the President's message was not made public.

Senator Neuberger, who survived an attack of cancer in 1958, died in a hospital after he had been stricken at his home. Only a few weeks ago Senator Neuberger flew home from the nation's capital for a rest. He had suffered several virus attacks and a bout with the shingles. He lapsed into a coma shortly after entering the hospital and died without regaining consciousness.

He was elected in 1954 as the first Democratic Senator from Oregon in forty years, unseating Republican Guy Cordon. His election gave the Democrats control of the Senate.

Warm personal tributes included one from Sen. Wayne Morse, D., Ore., formerly a Neuberger ally but sharply at odds with him since 1958: "Oregon and the nation have lost a courageous leader whose voice and pen will be sorely missed in this time of national and international crisis," Sen. Morse said. "Dick Neuberger wrote a great chapter in Oregon's political history. He loved young people, particularly students. His political record will inspire young people who study it for generations to come."

It was Senator Morse who arose on the Senate Floor to announce "with a sad and heavy heart" the death of his colleague. He was originally a personal friend who had been one of Mr. Neuberger's professors at the University of Oregon.

This statement was issued by Vice-President Nixon:

"Senator Neuberger's sincerity, integrity and dedication to public service earned him the highest tribute the Senate can pay to one of its members — its unqualified respect of not only the Senators from his own party but of his colleagues on the Republican side of the aisle as well."

Paul M. Butler, Democratic National Chairman, called Sen. Neuberger's death "a tremendous loss to our country and to our party, reports the New York Herald Tribune. Since he came to the United States Senate, following his dramatic victory in 1954, Richard Neuberger had been a leader in the fight for legislation to benefit the great majority of Americans," Mr. Butler said.

Senator Lyndon B. Johnson, Democrat, of Texas, the Majority Leader, said Senator Neuberger had many qualities that "endeared him to all of us. He had a great heart and great courage, and he was totally dedicated to his conviction," Mr. Johnson told the Senate. "The Senate meets in a mood of sorrow. The nation has lost a public servant of the highest calibre and most of us have lost one of the best friends we've ever had."

Sen. Mike Mansfield, D., Mont., assistant Democratic leader, called Senator Neuberger "one of the greatest, kindliest, most tolerant and understanding Senators of our generation."

The Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, the Senate Chaplain, said in his daily prayer that the hearts of members were heavy because "the voice of a dedicated public servant will not again be heard in this chamber. Here that voice was raised in passionate defense for the causes his conscience told him were right and just," Mr. Harris said.

Matthew B. Rosenhaus, chairman of the national board of trustees of the Eleanor Roosevelt Institute for Cancer Research, said: "Senator Neuberger was a tireless champion of his fellow man and a constant friend of humanity. He did not spare his own health in his constant efforts for the health of others, particularly in the crusade against cancer," says the New York Herald Tribune. The Senator was a sponsor of the Institute.

Mr. Neuberger favored a 1960 Democratic presidential ticket headed by Adlai E. Stevenson, with Senator John F. Kennedy for Vice President.

Senator Richard L. Neuberger had been a politician since college days and a newspaper man and author for a number of years when in 1954, he became Oregon's first Democratic United States Senator in forty years. The facility of self-expression was so automatic with him that he spurned the age-old traditional first-termer's rule of be-seen-and-not-heard.

Active both in Senate debate and in affairs of his party, he made an impressive mark as a freshman in the capital, arriving as a widely-heralded Democratic liberal but demonstrating that the label wasn't binding by party. He supported many Eisenhower policies, particularly in the foreign field. He was ardent in support of natural conservation.

Mr. Neuberger was always in the middle of a controversial subject, but never on the fence, says the New York Times. He was vigorous and forthright in his advocacy of a liberal, humane political philosophy and equally uncompromising in his opposition to what he considered stand-pattism or reaction.

In the Senate he fought for civil rights, for removal of bill-boards from highways, for funds for cancer research, for recall of Senators, for bringing Congressmen under "conflict of interest" laws, for Alaska statehood, and for housing aid measures.

After a visit to Germany early in the Hitler era, he sold an article on Nazism to "The Nation." This phase of his career led to success and hundreds of articles over the years. His by-line appeared in "The New Republic," "Harper's," "Collier's," "The Christian Century," "Forum," "Current History," "The American Magazine" and "Reader's Digest."

The topics of his articles and the subjects of his books provided the key to Mr. Neuberger's public life. Stories on Pacific Coast politics, Northwest scenic beauties, power development, conservation of salmon and other natural resources, the problems of the aged and the poor appeared in numerous magazines and newspapers. He served as correspondent for The Times from 1939 to 1954.

He wrote "Adventures in Politics: We Go to the Legislature" which chronicled a husband-wife team in public life. Maurine Brown, a teacher he married in 1945, just before his thirty-third birthday, also liked politics. From 1950 to 1954 they served together in the State Legislature. On re-election in 1952, they were the only candidates in Oregon to poll more votes than President Eisenhower.

A big man, nearly bald and wearing an easy smile, Senator Neuberger refreshed Washington by proposing sufficient taxation to support any new programs he advocated. Hiking and camping were among his hobbies. More public housing and government support of health research also were high on his legislative "must" list.

Senator Neuberger emerged from World War II as an Army captain, having spent most of his war service stationed at Whitehorse in Canada's Yukon Territory, says the New York Herald Tribune. He was a great friend of Canada.

Born in Portland on December 28, 1912, Mr. Neuberger found his surroundings not conducive to complacency for an inquiring, aggressive personality. His parents, Isaac and Ruth Lewis Neuberger, ran a restaurant and the boy soon found himself washing dishes behind the partition. Earlier, he had earned his first dollar by caddying for his grandfather, who had come to the Pacific Northwest from southern Germany in 1870.

The youth's years in the Portland grade schools passed in relative calm. He found outlet for his restless mind by special activity in the Boy Scouts, laying the groundwork for subsequent leadership in the field of conservation.

By the time he had entered high school, the future Senator was unable longer to restrain his compulsion to give voice to his surging thoughts. He was not yet 16 years old when he started to write for newspapers and magazines and he never gave up writing even after he had gone into politics. In fact, he used the written word to complement his political utterings, and vice versa.

Jews In N.Y. City Total 2,114,000; 27 Percent Of All

The Jewish population of New York City was put at 2,114,000 persons in a study released by the Federation of Jewish Philanthropies. Adherents of the Jewish faith now make up 27.1 per cent of the population of the city.

A total of 465,000 Jews live in Nassau, Suffolk, and Westchester Counties. The Jewish population in the New York area is estimated at half the total Jewish population of the United States.

The study was made by the Federation's Demographic Study Committee, of which James Felt, City Planning Commission chairman, is chairman, and Arthur J. Neumark and David Sher are members, says the New York Times. They are Federation trustees. The statistical work was directed by C. Morris Horowitz, consulting statistician of the Jewish Education Committee. Dr. Lawrence J. Kaplan conducted the survey.

The committee's 400-page report projected trends in the Jewish population of the New York area to 1975. It found their numbers in the city had grown nearly four times since 1900.

The city total is expected to increase only 22,000 to 2,136,000 by 1975, the surveyors reported. But this is because the more affluent elderly couples moving back to the city will not offset the trend to the suburbs.

The Jewish populations of Nassau, Suffolk and Westchester, the only suburban counties included in the survey, are expected to grow by 122,000 to a total of 587,000 by 1975.

"In the eight metropolitan counties, the Jewish population is now 2,[illegible],000, or 25.1 per cent of the total. The projections indicate this will rise to 2,[illegible],000 by 1975, when it will constitute 23.6 per cent of the population.

The committee found that, although poverty had not been eliminated, the Jewish population of the New York area had moved up the economic ladder, along with most Americans. As a group, it said, it has achieved a middle-income status.

Although dispersed over more areas, the population is more densely concentrated than it has ever been, says the New York Times. The older Jewish neighborhoods, such as the lower East Side, Williamsburg and Brownsville, are expected to continue to lose Jewish residents. Jews are increasing in Queens, which in 1975 will have double the quarter of a million it had in 1950, and in Nassau, the study shows.

A.J.C. Charges U.S. Policy Mixed In Bias Abroad

The American Jewish Congress said that United States Government agencies were "apparently becoming involved" in discriminatory acts by foreign countries against American Jews. It called upon Congress to investigate.

A resolution adopted by the Congress executive and administrative committees cited three instances that, it contended, showed more than "more toleration" by the State Department and other agencies.

One of the instances was a charge, published recently by the Jewish Telegraph Agency, that there was a "gentleman's agreement" whereby the State Department avoided assigning Jewish personnel to Pakistan, says the New York Times.

A second instance was said to be the approval by the Agriculture Department's Commodity Credit Corporation of charter contracts barring vessels trading with Israel from participating in its program of shipping surplus food to Arab countries.

The third was the reported observance by the Air Force of Saudi Arabia's requirement that no Jewish personnel be stationed at Dharan airfield.

"Together, they make up a disturbing pattern of discrimination that reveals an administration policy of apparent involvement in the attempt by some foreign governments to impose second-class citizenship on American Jews and to penalize Americans of other faiths as well," the resolution said.

The Congress noted the recent announcement by the Navy that it would drop a clause from its oil-shipping contract that required to support the [illegible] of Israel. It said the announcement "avoids the real question." What should be done, according to the Congress, is to serve notice on all countries that the United States will not buy oil from or give food and aid to nations "that demean the rights and status of American citizens."

The resolution was presented to the committees by the Congress' president, Dr. Joachim Prinz.

U.N. Is First World Group In History To Fight Anti-Semitism

For the first time in the age-long history of anti-Semitism, the problem of the persecution of Jews became a subject of international concern and action through the world organization of the United Nations. Hitherto, anti-Semitic acts were considered, as it was in the case of Nazi Germany, an internal matter of the country concerned, says the New York Herald Tribune. Henceforth, if a resolution adopted is carried out, the offending countries will be held accountable to the United Nations and will be obligated to stamp out anti-Semitism.

The resolution, unanimously adopted by the U.N. Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, condemned anti-Semitism and other forms of racial hatred as violations of the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

It is proposed that the eighty-two nations of the world organization "take all appropriate action to prevent and punish such acts, including the adoption of additional laws, if necessary, and the vigorous enforcement of existing laws."

It also proposed that the U.N. Secretary General undertake a world survey of recent anti-Semitic acts and measures taken by public authorities to prevent them and to punish the perpetrators. On the basis of this survey, the Sub-Commission will decide at its next session whether further action will be necessary.

The Sub-Commission is composed of fourteen members from the United States, Britain, France, Russia, Austria, Chile, Finland, India, Lebanon, Philippines, Poland, Sudan, United Arab Republic, and Uruguay, says the New York Herald Tribune. Judge Philip Halpern, of the United States, who sponsored the resolution together with members from Britain, France, Austria, Uruguay, and Finland, said approval of the resolution was a "historic occasion."

Most Drivers Possessed By Sense Of Urgency

Northern Daily News, of Kirkland Lake, Ontario, says: Our everyday life in this modern era seems to have developed a crazy quality. Our working hours leave us, at least on paper, more leisure time than our ancestors possessed; and yet we are always in a rush.

On every side are reminders of stress and strain. Each of us seems to be caught up in a frenzied atmosphere of rush and bustle. We set ourselves an exhausting pace that demands a constant rush from all who wish to keep from being over-run by the pack — at least, that is the general picture of our civilization.

Somehow this conception of an era of ragged nerves and tranquilizers, with everyone under intense pressure, doesn't seem to match all the facts. Most workers spend about 40 hours a week in surroundings that are tolerable and often downright comfortable. They have the means and the time for a wide range of education. They can relax in homes that are miracles of luxury and convenience compared with houses in the "good old days." In fact, to most of us, life looks pretty good.

Yet this impression of pressure and bustle, whether it is an illusion or not, does exist and does affect us. And in no area is this more obvious than in our driving habits.

The sense of urgency that the average driver gets when he takes the wheel is usually completely illogical. When he starts out he may have no real reason for hurry, and is usually heading off to do something he will enjoy far less than driving his car; yet his aim is to complete the journey in the shortest possible time. He winces at every momentary delay. A car cutting into line ahead of his is an affront. A red light is a minor tragedy.

The irrational part of the urge to hurry-drive is that it is largely ineffective. Trying to speed saves very little time, particularly in congested areas — and all too often it means a lot of time lost because of an accident, or a whole lifetime lost.

TORONTO MARRIAGES

MECKLINGER-TINTNER

The marriage of Miss Rebecca Tintner, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Otto Tintner, 180 Major Street, to Dr. Marvin Mecklinger, son of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Mecklinger, 19 Peveril Hill Road South, was solemnized on Wednesday, December 23, at six o'clock, at Beth Tzedec Synagogue. Rabbi Stuart E. Rosenberg officiated, assisted by Cantor Joseph Cooper. The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a white, peau de soie, full-length gown, made with a fitted bodice; with a V-neckline, trimmed with lace appliques; long sleeves, ending in lily-shaped points; and a bouffant skirt, which extended to a chapel train. Her veil of tulle illusion was caught to a rhinestone tiara; and she carried a Bible, adorned with a mauve orchid. Miss Harriet Kotler was maid of honour, and wore a waltz-length, sleeveless gown of pink peau de soie, with a sweetheart neckline. She had a matching headdress, and carried a bouquet of red roses. The bridesmaids, Miss Marilyn Weingarten and Miss Sharon Detsky, cousin of the groom, wore identical waltz-length, fitted, sleeveless bodices, with pink chiffon gowns, fashioned with scooped necklines. They had tiny matching hats and carried red roses. Joshua Tintner, brother of the bride, acted as best man; and the ushers were: Dr. A. Feldman, Marvin Benny, Bob. Greenbaum, all cousins of the groom; Dr. Harvey Freedman, Jack Ladowsky and Morton Weisberg. Mrs. Tintner, mother of the bride, wore a mauve, peau de soie, cocktail-length gown, having a beaded bodice, with small standing collar and short sleeves; and beaded back panel which extended to the hemline. She had a matching hat, and an orchid corsage. Mrs. Mecklinger, mother of the groom, wore a beaded gown of mauve peau de soie, made with small cap sleeves, and sweetheart neckline; and a full skirt, finished with a large, pleated side bow. She had a small matching hat, and an orchid corsage. Dr. and Mrs. Marvin Mecklinger spent their honeymoon in Miami Beach, Florida. The bride travelled in a red wool suit, with black accessories. They have taken up residence at 680 Roselawn Avenue.

Bar-Ilan University In Israel

BY DOROTHEA CHEIFETZ, EXECUTIVE ASSISTANT OF THE CANADIAN FRIENDS OF THE BAR-ILAN UNIVERSITY IN MONTREAL

(The following article is based on a press release of the Israeli Government Press Office.)

After five years of pioneering, a significant milestone was achieved in the young history of Bar-Ilan University, of Israel. On December 28, 1959, the first graduating class of young men and women was a tribute to the idealistic vision of a great scholar and leader in world Jewry, the late Professor Pinchos Churgin, who envisioned a new seat of learning for Israel dedicated to the sciences, the humanities, and the love of Jewish study. It was to be a university modern in spirit, which would give a universal education for Jewish youth including the spiritual and traditional values of Judaism. In the lovely gardens of Ramat Gan, near Tel Aviv, the buildings of a new university took shape. Today, its well-planned campus is one of the architectural attractions of Israel, and the university has moved out of the experimental stage. The buildings of the university, with the usual lecture rooms, libraries, laboratories, worship and administrative facilities, recreation and dining rooms, are open not only to Israeli students, but to others from all parts of the world, Canada, the United States, European and South American countries, Australia, North and South Africa. Altogether twelve foreign countries are represented in the student body of 423 of this year, with Israelis numbering 377.

Bar-Ilan's students returning to their respective communities are prepared to give the type of Jewish leadership that the communities require. Israel recognizes the university's cultural service and, in spite of the complexities of internal problems, cultural, economic and military, it has extended its practical help with a grant from the Government, and has acceded to the request for a School of Education to meet the shortage of High School teachers.

The University's courses are given in the natural sciences, mathematics, social sciences, and languages, parallel to those of standard colleges in the United States, Canada, and other Anglo-Saxon countries. Thus, Jewish students are enabled to obtain part of their higher education in Israel, and then to resume their studies in their home countries, without loss of credits.

The University is therefore training potential leaders of Jewish communities throughout the world, imbued with deep understanding of Israel's problems and aspirations. No qualified student is turned away for lack of funds, and therefore Scholarship Funds have been made available for deserving students who meet the academic requirements. It is in this department that the help of friends from abroad has rendered an important service.

At present, at McGill University, in Montreal, there is a graduate of Bar-Ilan on a World University Service Scholarship, Moshe Anisfeld, who joined the first freshman class when the

The Jews In The Year 2,000

BY RICHARD FELDMAN

Speculating on what life will be like in the future, is no new phenomenon. The Hebrew prophets and seers saw visions of the days to come. Plato 2,300 years ago constructed his ethical society — "The Republic" — and 450 years ago Sir Thomas More published his "Utopia." In our days, we have "short-term" seers who look ahead a mere 50 years.

Now two Jewish historians in America, Prof. Jacob R. Marcus, of the Hebrew Union College, and Prof. Oscar Handlin of Harvard University, venture to foretell what United States Jewry will be like in the year 2000. The subject — the future of the largest Jewish community, is in itself of interest to us, but it is more so because indirectly it deals also with the future of Jewish communities in English-speaking countries and that includes the community in South Africa.

I do not, as a rule, indulge in speculation into things to come, be it Jewish or general, and have disagreed with those who are preoccupied with the future and advocate certain measures to ensure that there be a future, and that it shall be according to their desires. I hold that each generation is called upon to take care of the present, and that by doing today what is right we do all we can to influence that there shall be a tomorrow. I have on occasions challenged the concept that the Jews as a people could not survive in an atmosphere free of persecution or discrimination.

Our mentors have been telling us that it was due to oppression, to being confined to ghettos and pales of settlement, that the miracle of Jewish survival was possible, and that with the removal of these and other barriers, assimilation would overwhelm us to a point of extinction. If Judaism, if the Jews living in many lands cannot survive amidst freedom and equality with their fellow citizens, is it so very important that it, and they, should survive? I have always held, however, and hold so still, that the ideals inherent in Judaism are universal and strong enough, and adaptable enough, to survive the many changes taking place in human society.

The symposium by the two historians only directly deals with this question, and comes to the conclusion that American Jewry is surviving and will survive — at least up to the year 2000. According to Dr. Marcus, assimilation is a threat to survival because it is an aspect of flight from prejudice, but "by its very nature it also becomes a means of survival as when it permits the individual to become so like his neighbours that he is no longer different." We will survive, he says, "for we will be accepted because we are like others."

This is one of the few interesting thoughts in the entire discussion. It is a new version of Zangwill's explanation of the dislike of the Jews — "the dislike of the unlike." The Jews will be so like the others that there will be no need to assimilate, no need to leave the Jewish camp.

Dr. Handlin's main thesis is built on the assumption that the Jews of America, while working in the cities, will reside in the suburbs where "all the terms of life call for conformity." He finds serious grounds for the fear that the development of "suburbia" will "entail the death of culture as Americans have known it in the past." As far as Jews are concerned, he holds that the long tradition of intellectuality that gave a peculiar dignity to learning, will not be readily accommodated in the suburb.

Dr. Handlin also poses the possibility of the opposite effect. Since conformity will be the pattern, will there not be conformity also as far as Jewish life is concerned? "In the past the very conditions of American life," he writes "its mobility and diversity — compelled men to find their own ground for togetherness." Dr. Handlin apparently does not know whether "togetherness" is good or bad, because in his conclusion he advocates a more conscious effort to keep the spirit of man from being stifled in the togetherness thrust upon them by the community. Likewise we are left guessing whether the drift to the suburbs will be a positive or negative factor in the continuation of Jewish life in America.

And what about religious observance in the year 2000? Succinctly and delightfully Dr. Marcus puts it thus: "Most Jews will be members of a religious society, for that is part of our American concept of respectability, and who are we to set ourselves up against our Christian neighbours?" As long as there will be Christian churches there will be synagogues, and so we should survive as a Jewish community! But why should we survive, asks Dr. Marcus? Is survival an end in itself?

He concedes that it is not wrong to live, to maintain beloved traditions, but he would like to believe that if we retain group identity within a larger context, then that separatism must be inspired by moral considerations. Even the Reform rabbi Dr. Marcus is very guarded in his references to the moral teachings of Judaism. Are these today regarded as political and perhaps subversive?

We are still, it would seem, in the period when the meaning and context of Judaism do not go beyond the laws laid down by the rabbis, and have only a remote connection with the teachings of social justice laid down by Moses and the Prophets. If this position is to continue into the year 2000, if the religious mentors are to continue suppressing this concept of Judaism will it matter much whether the Jews will survive or not?

It is possible, however, that the emphasis will shift from the mere formal observances to greater acceptance and practice of the moral teachings of Judaism. If and when that takes place, Judaism will live in the new and let us hope, the nobler society of the future.

A World Journey To World Jewry

BY DR. ISRAEL GOLDSTEIN, OF NEW YORK, CHAIRMAN OF THE WESTERN HEMISPHERE EXECUTIVE OF THE WORLD JEWISH CONGRESS, WHO WAS ON A WORLD TOUR WITH MRS. GOLDSTEIN FOR HIS FORTIETH ANNIVERSARY IN THE RABBINATE

Recently I enjoyed a new experience. Instead of arriving in Israel from the Far West, as I had always done before, I stepped off a plane that had brought me from the Far East. When you journey to Israel from the United States, you are aware of how much still has to be done economically, agriculturally, and industrially to bring Israel's standards up to those of America. Coming from the Far East, however, the comparison, except for Japan, is all in Israel's favor. It is indeed very understandable that Israel's practical cooperation is being sought in some Asian and African countries.

The relations between Israel and two of the smaller countries in particular, Burma and Ghana, are especially good. Because Israel is both small and young she is in a better position than larger powers to offer advice and assistance to some of the Asian and African countries. Hence its popularity with the Burmese who, I noted, very much welcome Israel's technical assistance and advice. I believe that something of the esteem in which Israel is held in many of the Eastern lands does rub off on the small Jewish communities that exist in far-away places.

In Japan, for instance, I found a considerable interest in Israel. Trade relations between the two countries are developing in a two-way exchange. Japan is importing potash and phosphates from Israel and is building, to Israeli specifications, two large tankers each costing about $9,000,000. The interest in Israel, obvious in Japanese trade and business areas, is fully shared by the Jewish community which numbers about 300 in Tokyo and another 75 in Kobe. The community includes former European refugees who made their way to Japan from Harbin and Shanghai, as well as a number of American businessmen.

Israel, and world Jewish affairs in general, were fully aired in my meetings with Jewish leaders in Japan and other parts of the world, and I found, wherever I went, a keen desire to maintain contact with Jewish communities everywhere. This feeling had its visible manifestations when the World Jewish Congress held its Fourth Plenary Session in Stockholm last summer. This interest and enthusiasm of the smaller communities for participation in this world meeting were most encouraging.

It was in Hong Kong that I thought back to Israel and her problems of immigration. Hong Kong has a tremendous immigration problem. The refugees pouring in from Communist China have swelled the population from 800,000 to 3,000,000. Small as it is, the local Jewish community, no more than 150 souls, has done yoeman work in aiding the refugees from China. One family in particular has done a great deal, the Kadoorie family. They have initiated a series of experimental farms for raising cattle, poultry, and vegetables which are given to the widows of the refugees to whom the colonial government grants a few acres of land. Hundreds of thousands have benefited from the Kadoorie projects. The Kadoories are proud Jews, proud of their tradition, proud of Israel. While I was in Hong Kong I met a representative of Zim, the Israeli mercantile company, who was at that time making arrangements for the shipping to that colony of Israel cement and pharmaceutical goods.

In Rangoon, the local Jewish community of about 200 has been reinforced by the arrival of a large number of Israelis there on various missions, building, shipping, pharmaceuticals, and poultry-raising. The Burmese Government is also very interested in Israel's method of establishing and maintaining its chain of border settlements. The Israel envoy and his staff enjoy a very high standing in Burma, both with the government and the people of the country.

The warmth of the welcome I received from Jews everywhere testified to their desire, indeed, their thirst, for contact with the world of Jewry. In some instances I came across practical problems. In Pakistan, for instance, the Jewish community is very short of Hebrew teachers; in Hong Kong I noted the need for a rabbi who could also be a teacher for the children; in Bangkok the Jewish community of about 60 needs a Sefar Torah, prayer books, and other ritual articles.

In some instances I was able to be of assistance, but I was made very much aware that the requests for help in personnel or in providing prayer books is indicative of the struggle of these communities for Jewish survival. We in the World Jewish Congress recognize this as one of our responsibilities and the whole issue was thoroughly aired when the representatives of these smaller communities gathered with delegates from the greater areas of Jewish settlement, for twelve days of conferences in Stockholm last August.

The common cold will often respond to the right kind of home treatment but the more serious types should have medical attention. If there is chill or fever with shortness of breath and if material is coughed up tinged with blood, the doctor should be consulted.

Mistakes in the choice of a bottle or tablet from the medicine cabinet have led to some tragic accidents. All poisons or drugs should be kept in clearly labelled containers and, as a special reminder in dim light, there should be a band of adhesive tape around the container.

AUDITED PAID CIRCULATION ABC

The Canadian Jewish Review is still the only Jewish publication in Canada printed in any language reaching the Jewish community which is not sponsored by a group or an organization and which has the distinction of being a member of the Audit Bureau of Circulations.

The Canadian Jewish Review is one of only 35 Audit Bureau of Circulations magazines in Canada; and one of only three published weekly in English. It gives wide, city-to-city coverage for your advertising message, and reaches a select consumer audience. It is received every Friday in the mail, and is read by the family groups which gather together for the Sabbath observance on Friday nights. Every issue is a guide to planning and purchasing, to the able-to-buy homes, with high-ranking purchasing power as well as understanding and appreciation of quality and prestige in goods and services.
The Canadian Jewish Review is a Jewish community publication; it fills a real need, acting as the link between the individual family and the whole Jewish world at large. It is a community record; is informative about the important Jewish world news, and gives the trends in Jewish thought and social welfare in these changing times. It reports the organizational life of all ages in the Jewish group; and Jewish life in far-off communities, with items of interest to women appearing weekly.
The Canadian Jewish Review is still the only Jewish publication in Canada printed in any language reaching the Jewish community which is not sponsored by a group or an organization and which is able to claim membership in the Audit Bureau of Circulations.

ABC and HIGH STANDARDS GO-TOGETHER

In qualifying for membership in the Audit Bureau of Circulations, publishers are doing more than providing advertisers with the facts about the circulation of their publications.

They are also giving active support to the principle that advertising space should be bought and sold only on the basis of verified information — a principle that has contributed in large measure to the interests of all advertisers.

CLASS IN COOKERY

SHIRRED SALMON CUP

one half-pound tin of salmon salt and pepper
four eggs
four custard cups

Grease cups. Flake salmon and press it around bottom and sides of cups. Break one egg into each cup. Sprinkle with salt and pepper. Set in oven of 375 degrees for fifteen to twenty minutes or until whites of eggs are firm. Scoop out of cup with large spoon. Serve with baked potatoes and green vegetables. This serves four.

Mrs. M. David Lipson,
6 Hockley Place, Toronto.

TAIGLACH

three eggs
enough flour to made a medium dough one and one-quarter pounds honey one tablespoon vegetable oil
one package of ground ginger

Combine eggs, oil, and flour, and knead just enough to made dough stick together. Divide it into four parts. Roll each part into individual strips, pencil thick. Cut strips into equal parts of one inch. Roll and tie each piece into a very small knot, as they swell when placed in honey. Allow knots to stand one-half hour to dry. Bring honey to a quick boil, and drop each piece into it, handling pieces carefully. Half-cover the pot so as to watch that taiglach boil until brown; and keep mixing around the sides, so that they do not stick together. When ready, lower heat and allow to simmer until extra-brown. Wet a board with cold water and spread it with the ginger. Place taiglach carefully on the board and sprinkle them on top with ginger.

A Faith To Live By

Radio address in the "Message Of Israel" program over Station CFCF

BY RABBI PAUL LINER, OF TEMPLE BETH SHOLOM, IN MONTREAL

This is a year of great significance for Canadian Jewry. Two hundred years have passed into history since the beginnings of a Jewish settlement on Canadian soil. It is a moment of solemn thanksgiving, of prayer and of hope; thanksgiving for two centuries of constructive activity; prayer that the coming days may bring peace and happiness and blessing to all men; and hope in the future inspired by a profound and abiding faith. That religious convictions enter deeply into the very fabric of Canadian Jewry is made evident by the rapid growth of new congregations and religious schools. This response is proof of a deeply-embedded craving for a faith to live by. It is part of that ageless urge inherent within our people since the earliest patriarchal days.

A faith to live by! What does this mean to you and to me? In these days of rapid change, man still hungers for a knowledge of the Power that sustains all life. Frequently questions are directed to us: What is the nature of God? Where is He to be found? How is His presence to be felt? Man has wanted full particulars, a complete and exacting definition. Answers to these queries are the formulation of creed and belief; the basis for our prayers and religious utterances.

Daily life, however, requires us to understand the full implications of our beliefs. What is most important is the acknowledgment of God, in our thoughts and feelings, in our words even as in our deeds. Definitions are to be translated into reality. They must be applied. Those very same lips which verbalize, also attest to God's reality in how one relates to his fellow human beings, and in the ability to seek that which is good, noble, and just in life. Yes, what matters most in any definition of God is what we do, and not merely what we say.

Man has developed an unusual capacity for the use of words and phrases. How often do the words of our mouth correspond to the meditations of the heart? Do the inclinations of the heart agree with the articulations from our lips? True belief is more than a verbal statement or a pious phrase. Beliefs and feelings should be one and the same. And feelings in turn express themselves in deed, deeds that are not sporadic or occasional, but constant. The consciousness of God encompasses each fleeting moment of the day, from the hour of arising in the morning, until retirement in the evening.

One often hears people say that "familiarity breeds contempt." In human relationships it is not always advisable to be over familiar in the interests of preserving lasting friendships. Most desirable is a certain amount of reserve. And yet, one should be friendly and sociable. With God, no such restrictions or reservations are ever necessary. Intimacy with the Creator of all life evokes greater reverence and a more durable love.

I recall the words of the commencement speaker, spoken at the graduation exercises from the Fort Slocum Chaplaincy School some years ago: "Walk intimately with God, talk to Him in your prayers, and remember to affirm His being by your deeds."

In Jewish tradition God is spoken of in the most intimate terms. A proximity and closeness are indicated in these expressions. God is called Father, King, Shepherd, the Merciful One, all suggestive of a Deity near at hand. The great biblical patriarchs felt such a personal contact that at times they raised their voices in disagreement with His actions. Abraham could argue therefore with Him about the impending fate of the wicked cities of Sodom and Gomorrah. The man Job even ventured to question God's actions. What a sharp contrast to the lives we lead today. Frequently the invoking of His name is nothing more than a social propriety, a convention gesture, bereft of any religious fervor. We recall His name in moments of need and stress. We forget Him only too often in personal triumph and joy. God must be with us at all times and under all circumstances, in joy as in sorrow.

Who is God? Rather should we ask what impact does the word "God" have upon us in our daily speech, in our activities in the business world, and in the thoughts that run through our minds? Hymns and songs may inspire a mood of reverence. It is more imperative to follow a good, honourable, and respectful life.

Where does this God live? Where can you find Him? Here and everywhere! The Rabbis speak of the Master of the World as the Place, "Hamakom". He lives as much within the human heart as in the beautifully designed houses of prayer. The most humble of dwellings contains His presence. Moses discovers Him in the wilderness near a bramble bush; Isaiah has visions of the Deity while attending a service in the temple; Jacob is startled to find Him while resting upon a hard pillow of stones. The universe is His abode, and His sanctuary reaches beyond the starry firmament above. All of life in all of its places is sacred. Man must therefore show reverence not only before altars of wood and stone, but also in the presence of all that draws upon the breath of life. The entire world is God's altar.

A God-faith requires action. It makes demands of us. It summons us to destroy that which is evil in life and to help create a better and more just world. Those who are strong must help the weak and feeble, those who are endowed with worldly goods must open their hands in giving to the needy. Such a faith cautions us not to draw lines of distinction between color or creed, or to restrict the fatherhood of God to any one people and make spiritual orphans of others. When man says "no" to any form of human exploitation or effacement of the divine image within man, when pangs of conscience are aroused and tears are shed for those who live in deprivation and hunger, God's name is truly invoked. When man is saddened by the loss of a single human life, when his heart grieves at human degradation and humiliation, God's presence is felt.

The liturgy of the Union Prayer Book aptly expresses these thoughts in the majestic words of: "When justice burns like a flaming fire within us, when love evokes killing sacrifice from us, when, to the last full measure of selfless devotion, we proclaim our belief in the ultimate triumph of truth and righteousness, do we not bow down before the vision of Thy goodness? Thou livest within our hearts, as Thou dost pervade the world, and we through righteousness behold Thy presence."

University opened in 1955. He is 25, a highly qualified student, and a graduate in psychology, the first Israeli student to hold a research scholarship at McGill University. His current project is entitled, "The Social Motivations For Learning A Second Language". When he returns to Israel he will apply his knowledge to Israel's integration problems.

The faculty of Bar-Ilan, 90 in number, includes professors and lecturers from leading universities in Europe, Canada, and America, as well as outstanding Israeli scholars and teachers. The acting director general is Dr. Tuvia Bar-Ilan, the son of a Zionist leader, known for his work in the field of chemistry with the late Dr. Chaim Weizmann, first president of Israel. A grant from the American Government permits the University to invite a recognized American scholar of the University's choosing who will serve as visiting professor of American studies. The chair of American Studies makes it possible for Israeli students to explore the culture of other nations.

The University has a psychological research laboratory and is able to sponsor the only University-connected psychological clinic in Israel. Bar-Ilan undergraduates conduct researches in various prisons and homes for the insane. The primary purpose of this department is to train competent psychologists for scientific investigation into such questions as: What are the facts of Israeli criminality and what are its causes? Which educative techniques are most effective with the different cultural groups?

Unfortunately, however, Israel lacks sufficient personnel to cope with the numerous and complex problems. Thus it can be seen that the training of research psychologists is not a luxury, but a necessity which Israel can ill afford to neglect. The university also sponsors a course in criminology requested by the Israeli Police for their officers, which is also open to the students and the general public. Also a department of music has been established, the first of its kind in an Israeli University.

The University has opened a branch to give extension courses in Beersheba. Rabbi Joseph Lookstein, chairman of the university's board of trustees, points out that academic education in the Negev will provide the vital need of raising the cultural level of the masses, particularly those coming from the oriental countries. A panel of teachers from among the student body, qualified to teach in secondary schools, and recognized by the Ministry of Education, are giving free secondary school courses for children at Kiryat Ono.

Since high school education is costly, and this is a voluntary service by the students, the project has evoked favourable comment in the press throughout the country. During the week-ends, too, many of the students visit immigrant areas to spend time with the newcomers and help them to learn Hebrew.

A new chair of studies which will be devoted to the history of the Jews during the Nazi period 1933-1945 has been described as a "living memorial to our heroic brethren". Dr. M. Dvorzetsky who is in charge, declares "that it was a duty we owed to the millions of our brethren, who perished in extermination camps, to ensure that their trials and tribulations will never be forgotten by us nor by the generations to come".

On December 28, 1959, the first graduating class, in caps and gowns, twenty-seven young men and women, trooped through the campus of Bar-Ilan University to the main auditorium to receive their B.A. and B.Sc. diplomas. Among those present were the Chief Rabbi of Tel Aviv; the Minister of the Interior; the U.S. Ambassador, Ogden R. Reid; and the Mayors of Ramat Gan and Bnei Brak. An honorary fellowship was conferred upon Mr. Reid who noted that "Bar-Ilan University is making increasingly important contribution to modern knowledge and education in close attachment to the sacred tenets of Judaism". Fourteen graduates received degrees in the natural sciences. The university bestows Master's degrees, and at a later date will confer the doctorate degree.

In January a new building was dedicated, the Abraham Lincoln School of Physics. Professor Max Jammer, head of the physics department, pointed out "that this building stands as a symbol that scientific and religious values can happily commingle". An Abraham Lincoln exhibition is housed in the building with 36 illuminated displays of Lincoln's life, time, and works.

The feeling at Bar Ilan University is that as important as it is for Israel to have great administrators, diplomats, and defense forces, it is no less important and essential that its cultural and spiritual development should be its highest goal. For in the final analysis the greatness of Israel will be measured not merely in terms of defense and of diplomacy, but in learning and its spirit of the prophetic teachings.

In 1930, Mr. Neuberger entered the University of Oregon. The six years he spent on that campus were years of excitement, controversy, and preparation for later life. He took over editorship of The Oregon Emerald, student newspaper, and "stood the campus on its ear." First he fought compulsory military training and then he battled fraternities.

These undergraduate campaigns were only skirmishes. His chief interest was politics, and he spoke often on state and national issues. These were the real battles in his scale of values, says the New York Times. Senator Wayne Morse at that time was dean of the university law school in which Mr. Neuberger was enrolled.
